

Elementary Poem

Benjamin Moak, age 7

Too much power for anyone is not a very good thing.

In the case of a country, it won't let freedom ring.

No one group can have control if checks are in place.

And balance is the key to make sure freedom stays.

Those who wrote our Constitution were afraid of power.

They set up three branches, so none of them would cower.

Executive, legislative and the judiciary.

All balance powers benefitting you and me.

Because of my freedoms, I can talk and not be scared.

Because of my freedoms, I can let my thoughts be bare.

The Constitution is the supreme law of the land.

Power is limited, and to me that is so grand!
